

LET THERE BE LIGHT
(Originally published March 1966)

One of the young and new surgeons here relates the following tale. Having already been impressed by the reputation and deification of our County Society leader, he was entering the Medical Center just as Lou Hazouri drove up to park his current Cadillac. He noted, as Lou lumbered toward the entrance, that the headlights had been left burning. He promptly called out this information, and Lou, without breaking stride, turned and waved an imperious hand at the lights much in the manner of commanding sea waters to part, and continued on his way. And lo the lights went out.

Determined neither to display his ignorance by asking for an explanation nor genuflect, he followed the great one in, silently and at a wary and respectful distance. The occurrence troubled him for several days until he learned of Cadillac's new Twilight Sentinel, a delayed action rheostat device for turning off headlights at a set interval after the motor stops. Although he is a bit disappointed, he is willing to chalk up a score to King Louis for carrying it off in the grand manner.
