

EDITORIAL AGONY
(Originally published January 1969)

We have been at this business of editing the Bulletin for seven years now, and seldom has a month passed without the agony of finding enough material to fill the pages at deadline time. There have been a number of sporadic contributors (usually with prodding) and one or two much appreciated regular writers, but, for the most part, outside help has been noticeable only by its persistent absence.

If the CPC fails to come through on schedule, we are in bad shape. We are committed by contract to our generous advertisers and must produce a relatively constant number of pages per issue. The problem of filling them falls then on a tiring editor and on our seemingly untiring executive secretary for whom, at the start of this eighth year, we again give thanks.

It would seem reasonable, however, since the Bulletin is the creation of the entire county medical society, that many of the members should involve themselves by submitting material for publication. Case reports in particular are neither hard to find nor painful to dictate or write. We need them. Off the cuff articles, on any subject, medical or non-medical, are all welcome. We urge you to do your part.

In addition, the eleven associate editors listed on the table of contents page are herewith notified that the next eleven editorial pages belong to them; one by one, month by month, in alphabetical order.

Happy New Year.
